Dear Juliana and Tejinder,

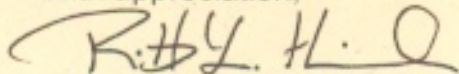

As you know, the Climate Change Leadership Institute (CCLI) is promoting healthy soil stewardship in New Mexico by having assisted in the development, passage and now implementation of the the Healthy Soil Act and by advancing regenerative agriculture in civil society through education, collaboration and action. As you also know, we give out annual seed grants to honor the excellence of allies who help address climate change while building up thriving, sustainable communities.

This year it gives us great pleasure to award CCLI's 2019 Conservation Award to Reunity Farm, for your outstanding endeavors to engage the community as you re-invigorate the land with regenerative agriculture. We commend you on embracing soil health principles (including minimizing harm with your intention to go no-till and maximizing biodiversity with your plan for multi-species cover crops, not mention your extensive compost operations) and we commend your entrepreneurialism.

Growing vegetables, herbs, fruits, and flowers following regenerative and organic farming standards is outstanding in and of itself, but you go further by actively supporting education and the local food system. We appreciate your many endeavors including: donating 10,000 pounds of produce to community hunger efforts annually, operating a neighborhood farm stand, hosting field trips & workshops, nurturing the soil of the farm with local compost sourced from many of the same places to which the farm's produce is donated, and so forth.

This circular programming carries on the spirit embodied by Santa Fe Community Farm founder John Stephenson. His mantra "The Golden Circle" will grow and spread thanks to your and your many partners' collective stellar efforts. We at CCLI are proud to be an ally with you in this virtuous endeavor.

With appreciation,

Robb Hirsch
